

Dovgal Yu.A.

MENTAL DISORDERS AND THEIR ACCEPTANCE IN THE SOCIETY

Tutor: senior teacher Prostotina O.V.

Department of Foreign Languages

Belarusian State Medical University, Minsk

Relevance. The consecration of such topic as mental disorders is necessary for modern society in order to foster tolerance, the ability to understand the situation properly without harming people “different” from us.

Aim: to convey to the society a new, non-existing previously, behavior model in which people with mental disabilities are not outcasts and do not need their mental health evaluation; to develop and introduce new methods of youth behavior in relation to people “different” from us.

Materials and methods. The positive qualities training was carried out taking into account the age, photo and video materials available for this age group under consideration.

Results and their discussion. The result is thought achieved if all age groups have listened to and assimilated the material given on this topic, as well as systematized knowledge. People with “differences” in the nervous system are not the subject under discussion.

Conclusions: the need for the society behavior correct manner description in relation to “different” people has been established.

We have managed to find out the qualities and actions necessary for the society when meeting such people.

This research is believed effective if the necessity to be tolerant to others is realized properly and simple requirements in communicating with “different” people are fulfilled.